THE "MOVIES"

Appomattox people can easily recall when moving pictures first appeared, and who remember saying that they were "only a passing fad," will be interested to learn that Thomas A. Edison, the great inventor, says they are just in their infancy, and that in 20 years children will be taught by moving pictures instead of out of books. He says there is nothing so powerful as moving pictures to influence people. "They are the most powerful means of influencing people at the present time," he asserts, "and will increase in power from year to year. Whoever controls the motion picture industry controls the most powerful medium of influence over the people." We believe what Mr. Edison says is largely true. And for that same reason we believe that no community is making a mistake when it insists that the pictures being shown to its young people are as clean in their moral teaching as are the books they study in school.

FACTORY WORK FOR FARMERS

Everything that Henry Ford does is interesting. Residents of Appomattox may not always agree with him, but they sit up and take notice when he announces a plan, whether it is to put up money for a peace ship or to make a few hundred thousand extra automobiles this year. His latest proposal is said to contemplate the building of small factories here and there, wherever he can obtain suitable sites for water power. He has long been of the opinion that farming is not an efficient business, because the farmer puts in too much time at non-productive affairs. He thinks men ought to farm in summer and build automobiles in winter.

And now he proposes to give them a chance to do that very thing by building factories in small towns, operating them at full capacity during the winter months and closing them up in the spring so the farmers can go back to their crops. Apparently he does not see any difficulty in taking care of the stock. He would advocate power farming, of course, and would have the farmers use tractors instead of horses, and we suppose so arrange it that the cow and chickens could be looked after by the women folks until the men got home from the factory in the evening. Dairymen he would not offer jobs in the factory because that is an all-year round business.

The proposal is a revolutionary one. So have been many things done by Henry Ford. And it is going to be interesting to watch him and see just how farshe can go with it.

WHEN WE GET ROADS

We hope to see the time, and that not very far away, when every town in this country not able to boast a library will have facilities whereby wholesome, entertaining and instructive books and magazines can be regularly deposited at the doors of its residents. And we would also like to see such a system arranged as to make it possible for residents out in the rural districts to secure similar advantages.

Some of these days, when we get perfect roads around Appomattox this is going to come. The State will eventually provide library trucks and these will make regular trips into every county, distributing new books and magazines, and collecting those that have been read and carrying them on to others. No one will be able to measure the value of such a circulating library. Already a few eastern States have tried it out and found it the most popular thing since the parcel post started.

But in every district where it has been tried out the roads are pretty near perfect. The State cannot afford to start out trucks over roads that are frequently impassable and hope to maintain any kind of satisfactory schedule. It is up to the citizens of this State to fight harder for improved roads in the future than they have ever fought in the past if they expect to get far enough out of the mud to enjoy such advantages as the motor truck library would furnish them. Especially is this true in the winter time—the very time when readers in our smaller towns and out in the rural districts most appreciate new reading matter. Once we have roads enough to warrant the traveling library trucks starting out we'll find ourselves enjoying many more advantages that we haven't yet dreamed of.

Maybe the reason they set Rome on fire is because Nero was learning to play jazz on his fiddle.

THE NEBRASKA WAY

The State of Nebraska has taken a very definite step toward curbing landscape disfigurement along public highways by the erection of unsightly billboards, which prove a double nuisance in many instances in that they also shut off the view of motorists at danger points. Under a bill passed by the legislature the Department of Public Works is made the guardian of the State's beauty spots. The bill not only provides for a permit fee, but empowers the department to remove any sign it cares to remove without giving cause. Billboards give all American towns a sameness when viewed from a railroad train, and are unsightly. But that will no longer be the case in Nebraska, and neither will her highways be defaced by them. Nebraska is setting a example, and it wouldn't be a bad idea for Appomattox voters to remember it and suggest to their lawmakers when they meet them that they try the same thing out in this State.

HOLDING ON TO LIFE

Safety First is never a cripple. Safety First never goes to the hospital on a stretcher. Safety First never lies cold and damp in an undertaking establishment awaiting identification. Man is given only one life on earth, and when that is snuffed out he is through. He gets one body, and when he loses any part of it that part is gone for good. If cripples are the best argument for Safety First, and the loss of life and limb is evidence in favor of it, then Safety First has won its case completely and court is adjourned. If on the site of every tragedy due to carelessness a monument was erected this entire country would look like a graveyard. Safety First is something more than a slogan—it's a prayer for protection from folly and carelessness. It is an invocation for men, women and children to preserve what they possess and never can regain if lost. It is a petition to the heedless to see that their recklessness destroys no one's life, no one's limb, no one's happiness. Man can build a new machine when one is destroyed. But he can not rebuild a human body, and he cannot replace a soul.

Life goes fast! Why not hold on to it?

As The Editor Sees It

The department of justice is still going after corporations and individual contractors who robbed the governments by the wholesale during the war.

Some of these "birds" operated on a shoestring and cleaned up millions—something no honest or fair minded man can do.

Every man who profiteered at the expense of his country during the war should be required to serve in the next one, and be among the first to go "over the top and into the jaws of hell," where the devil would be sure to get them.

Too many of these Benedict Arnolds are still at large and feasting on your money and ours.

"Sky advertising" is probably the latest dodge to command the attention of the public.

A pilot in an aeroplane goes up into the sky makes twists and turns, and leaves a smoke screen behind him in the form of letters, these letters being woven into words and sentences.

But meantime local merchants can blaze a plainer trail through the advertising pages of The Times-Virginian—without smoke and at less expense.

Fine, fine, fine and then bully!

Senator Ferris of Michigan advises girls not to marry until they are capable of supporting a husband.

With such a prospect in view our marriageable young men ought to take heart and buck up and pop in a hurry—to the right girl.

A campaign is on now for government ownership of railroads, or at least it is trying to crawl into the campaign class.

We are not certain whether it would be advantageous or not, but if it comes we enter an advance protest against any further boost in freight rates.

This year the income of the United States, or rather of the people, is expected to reach sixty billions of dollars.

Sixty billions looks like a large sum, but in reality it is a small amount considering the personal valuation the average man places upon himself and his time.

Wives should not expect their husbands to get down and crawl to them. It takes too long to cover the distance.

Folks around Appomattox might be able to keep their boys on the farm if they could purchase tractors that would make sixty miles an hour.

The coward has his wife telephone the office he is sick; the brave man tells his boss he is going fishing.

We can prove it by any man in Appomattox that the world is never going to be perfect until they learn to make a pair of pants that will last as long as a vest.

The little girl had measles in the early spring and had not been real well since. The Dr. was called Tuesday and pronounced her case appendicitis. They made arrangements to take her to the hospital. She arrived at the hospital Wednesday morning and was operated upon that afternoon and died that night about 9:30. She was buried Friday at the family burying ground. A large concourse of sorrying relatives and friends. Her uncles acted as pall bearers and her little cousins carried the flowers which were both profuse and beautiful. We have rumors of good roads from Bent Creek to Appomattox, also of a rail road connecting the C. & O. from north to south, through Appomattox—with the Virginian. If these things materialize, it will be a great day for Appomattox and property in this section will be enhanced 100 per cent.

The wide awake young men of the neighborhood have organized a base ball team. Mr. George Abbitt was elected manager, Mr. Jeff Kinney, captain and George Abbitt, Jr., treasurer. Vera heretofore has furnished some fine base ball "stuff" and we are looking for some nifty games before the season closes.

At this writing we are having a most glorious rain which will mean millions of dollars to the farmers. It came in time after all—what a pity that poor weak humanity can not have faith enough to trust the Lord for the rains and seasons, "He knoweth what we have need of even before we ask." So why not trust Him more and worry less?

Prominent health experts advise eating clean properly kept meats

Eminent authorities tell us that tender wholesome meat is our most important food. It is a great strength builder. It is completely digested by the normal person. No other food repairs bodily waste so perfectly or provides so much energy and muscular strength as savory, carefully kept meat.

Again scientists tell us the goodness in meats depends upon how they are kept and prepared. For instance, when meats are kept continually near the freezing point in sanitary refrigerators the natural juices react upon the meat tissues under the dry cold atmosphere which makes them delightfully tender and tasteful.

This is the reason why meats sold by sanitary Hussmannized meat markets have a surprisingly delicious tastiness all their own. Kept continually under three plate glass walls, in the Hussmann Freezer Display Counter, you will see Nature's best food full of the rich, tempting flavor every one loves so well.

It pays to exercise care and judgment in selecting your meat market. The white and blue sign of Better Meats, Cleaner Meats, Quicker Service is your assurance of healthful meats. There's one in your neighborhood.
